THE TALE OF ARGYLE

The design of Argyle was inspired by the Dreamtime Story of the origin of the Argyle Diamond Mine, one of the world's largest diamonds suppliers located in the remote East Kimberley Region of Western Australia. Diamonds are woven into the Dreamtime stories of the Mirriuwung and Gija traditional owners of the land.

The feature painting at the entrance of Argyle was drawn by April Nulgit. It tells the story of a place not far from the Argyle Diamond Mine. It was here that the giant Barramundi, Daiwul, swam down Bow River, during the Narrangarni or Dreamtime Creation Era. Three women were chasing Daiwul. But she was a clever fish and jumped over the fish trap that the three women had set. As Daiwul passed over the hill, her underbelly scraped the hill causing a crack to form in the hill, where the gap is shown in the painting. The scales of her underbelly were scattered across the countryside and turned into diamonds of all colours that are found there today. She also jumped over the hill located directly behind Bow River. The women went down and stood at the edge of the water at a place called Gawinyin, or Cattle Creek Rockhole, on the river south of the mine. They turned to stone, and you can still see them standing near the waterhole today.
